Here's My Story

I wanted a Founder's Office role, the kind not posted on job boards.

So I did something different.

I emailed 1,000+ D2C Founders & others too, across India.

This post breaks down the most important part:

What to actually write inside your cold email, whether you're pitching for a role, a collaboration, or anything else.

After Many Tries...

I found this one email body which got me get 4 interviews at Zomato & a few others + initial conversations with multiple founders.

Before Writing Cold Emails, Understand This

Put yourself inside a founder's mind.

You're asking for their most limited resource i.e.
time.

Founders aren't reading for fun, they're scanning for relevance.

What Founders Think When They See Your Email

- Is this worth my time?
- Is this clear in 5 seconds?
- Can I trust this person to not waste my team's time?
- Can I skim this fast?

My template solves these problems/questions (Read Ahead) + I have created new a ChatGPT prompt for you to convert your emails into my template.

Where Most People Go Wrong

- ✗ Long paragraphs
- ✗ Too much about themselves
- ✗ No clear ask
- ✗ Wasting the first 3 lines

Add a side note: No one cares where you did your bachelor's or some other detail if you can't show relevance fast.

Hi [First Name],

I know you're busy & get a lot of emails, so I'll keep this short — it'll take less than 60 seconds to read.

I'm reaching out to express my interest in [joining/working with] [Company Name], particularly in a role like [Founder's Office/Chief of Staff/Business Strategy] or any strategic capacity.

About My Brief Journey:

- [Early Start/Background]: [One quick line about early work]
- [Education/Relevant Skills]: [One quick line about education or key expertise]
- [Professional Highlight]: [One quick line about major work achievement or impact]

I've attached my resume for reference.

I completely understand if you're busy — even a brief reply would genuinely make my day.

Best regards,
[Your Name]
